I ever get called gay again by someone I don't even know... Well, I don't have a fair throat. What can be done? Online multiplayer is awesome if you enjoyed it with friends. When your friends aren't online, if you wake up all night for insomnia and want to play Queue Live or Left 4 Dead or anything on Xbox Live at 4:00, when you have to play with a bunch of strangers, life can really suck. Be prepared to be randomly, verbally abused fr no reason. Get ready to listen to the profanity squirted out by awkward, adolescent voices. Even if you don't use voip, get ready to be hastily typed, or worse, macro-recorded insults thrown at you as quickly as immature fingers can make them. Something of perceived anonymity brings out the worst for some people. I don't want to put teenagers in a can, as I've met some very nice 12-year-olds, but they seem to be the worst, at least according to my admittedly uns scienceless survey. It consists in counting how often sounds crack — calling it a very, very naughty word — as they throw curses. I'm not accused by virtually everyone who plays online through matchmakers like gamespy arcade, Steam, built-in server browsers, or anything else. I made some good online friends through random matchups. But I'm on the verge of quitting online gaming with strangers altogether soon because I've had the abuse that can quickly eliminate out the fun. As soon as losers are banned, new accounts will be opened and joined. As often as the ESRB prices games M, kids get their hands on them anyway. Why do they feel the urge to muddy everyone meet online? Is that just bad nature? Bad parenting? Some kind of social deficiency? The worst of them react to everything from a complex word that starts with M, has an F in it, and ends in ER- even if you try to convince them. You can't argue with a four-year-old, and it's the mentality of idiots that ruin matchups for those who act our time. Continuous...
